

Let Us Help You Develop Engaged, Expert, and Energized Adult Learners

Topics 7 - 9

Join us to learn about powerful teaching practices that improve student learning

Anne Davies and Sandra Herbst, working with a professional videographer, have produced three more high-quality, focussed, and engaging videos in the Professional Learning Support Collection. Each of the three topics gives you everything you need to run quality professional development sessions:

- A learning guide
- The voice of experts
- Classroom video clips
- Time to reflect and process
- Ways to extend the learning

Choose the topic (or topics) that best match your school goals.

Topic 7 Beginning With the End in Mind When we know where we are going, we are more likely to get there. That means learners know right from the start what needs to be learned and what success looks like. Educators express what is to be learned in clear, learner-friendly language so that learners can know what is to be accomplished. It is both a simple and a powerful idea to begin with the end in mind.	Topic 8 Planning Reliable and Valid Evidence Informed professional judgment is more possible when teachers plan to collect evidence from multiple sources – observations, products, and conversations – over time. This process is called triangulation, and results in reliable and valid evidence of learning that informs teachers’ professional judgment. When we plan to collect the evidence we need along the way, reporting becomes easier.	Topic 9 Collecting Evidence of Learning Educators need to collect evidence from multiple sources – observations, products, and conversations – over time in order to have the information they need to inform their professional judgment. Yet collecting assessment information and data from multiple sources can be overwhelming, given the realities of today. In this session we provide practical and possible ideas that include engaging the learners in collecting evidence themselves.
Change happens when you see the next step. Choose one, two, or all three of these topics.
